The Guinnessman Collection

The person known as ‘theguinnessman’ on eBay, and in auction rooms across the country, was Steve Smith.

Steve tragically died in May 2014, far too young.

He was a Guinness advertising collector - or maybe I should say he was THE Guinness Collector, such was the hoard he accumulated.

I never really understood what turned him onto Guinness but he started collecting beer mats of the world and it simply developed from there, and a good job allowed him to indulge his passion. If he didn't have an item, and he wanted it, money was no barrier. I can't tell you how many times he outbid me!

He was a tall slim bearded man with a quiet manner - usually first at the door when the Fair opened, looking to find that elusive item.

Steve began his collecting early on, before Guinness advertising became a craze scooping up many wonderful items and one-off items, pieces “as rare as hens teeth”. He hunted every provincial and national collectors fair and auction room in this country, and Ireland, filling his house - every room lined with collectables, in cupboards, in the loft, up the stairs. His dining room became a shrine, an upstairs room was converted into a display room with shelves for trays, showcards and sundry small items. He organised, but never catalogued, the collection as by then it was too large.

I was fortunate enough to visit his house many times when writing my book on Guinness Collectables, allowing me to photograph much of his collection. There was not much he didn't have.

We have lost a valued collector but maybe now as his collection is sold and spread around the world (all items carrying an identifying ‘Steve Smith Collection’ sticker) it will perhaps inject new life into the hobby. I think Steve would very much like that.

David Hughes

Author “The Guide to Guinness Collectables”

As David says, Steve was intent on building THE Guinness Collection.

The family packed it all magnificently, but unpacking it back in sunny Elsecar and compiling this catalogue was a logistical nightmare.... and as Frank, myself & Clare finished it we felt what better way than to enjoy a pint of Guinness - and toast a truly remarkable man and the collection he put together!

How to present so much material was problematic. One sale would have simply flooded the market so we chose one catalogue - split across 2 separate sales, both conducted live over the internet.

We chose upon a square catalogue to enable it to sit on Guinness collectors shelves by the side of Davids ‘classic’ reference guide, and in years to come folks will undoubtedly talk about ‘the Guinnessman Collection’ with empathy and warmth in their hearts. Enjoy.
